AMMAN, May 22 (JNA)--His Majesty King Hussein today explained to the U.N. commission investigating Israel's practices in the occupied Arab territories the far-reaching consequences of Israel's settlement policy which aims at the eviction of the Arab inhabitants from their lands. He also briefed the commission members during a meeting at Al Hashemiya Palace on Israel's attempts to alter the character of the occupied Arab lands and its attempts to legitimise its illegal occupation of Arab territory in disregard of U.N. resolutions and world principles. The King stressed that such illegal policies obstruct efforts for achieving a just and comprehensive peaceful settlement in the Middle East. He also explained Jordan's position vis-a-vis the Middle East question, stressing that a just and comprehensive peace can not be achieved without the restoration of Arab Jerusalem to Arab sovereignty, the withdrawal of Israeli forces from all occupied Arab territories in implementation of U.N. resolutions and the safeguarding of Palestinian rights including the right to self-determination in Palestine. Attending the audience were His Highness Crown Prince Hassan, Chief of the Royal Court Sharif Abdul Hamid Sharaf and Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Hassan Ibrahim.

Sarkis begins talks to form new cabinet

BEIRUT, May 22 (R)--Lebanese President Elias Sarkis today began talks with political leaders aimed at forming a new government to tackle the country's protracted political and sectarian crisis.

Mr. Sarkis met Parliamentary Speaker Kamel Al Aqad in the first of an expected lengthy series of discussions with members of the 99-seat legislature. The talks followed the resignation last week of Premier Salim Al Hoss and his cabinet of technicians in a move intended to hasten efforts to form a government representing all of Lebanon's leftist and rightist factions.

But the president's reconciliation bid faces major obstacles, both in healing the four-year-old violent rift between right and left wingers and in overcoming splits between leading rightists.

Dr. Hoss, who is staying on as caretaker premier, is favoured by some political analysts to lead any national unity government because of his reputation for neutrality. But he has said in a newspaper interview that he is not interested in further office.

A top Syrian official yesterday visited former President Suleiman Franjeh in his northern stronghold of Zgharta in an apparent attempt to soften his antagonism towards Pierre Gemayel's Falange Party.

Mr. Franjeh has accused the Falangists of assassinating his son Tony and other family members and supporters last June.

Continued fighting last weekend between Falangists and supporters of the other main right-wing faction, Camille Chamoun's National Liberal Party, cast doubts on the possibility of a planned merger between the two heavily-armed groups.

But rightist division is only one of the problems facing President Sarkis.

In southern Lebanon, renegade army major Saad Haddad has declared an enclave along the Israeli border to be independent of the central government and had called his zone of influence "Free Lebanon."

Mr. Haddad depends heavily for political and military support on Israel in his fight against the presence of Palestinians and the

Because of American 'hostile policy'

Qadhafi may let Soviet fleet into Libyan ports

TRIPOLI, May 22 (R)--The Libyan Jamahiriyyah is considering allowing Soviet warships to use its strategic Mediterranean ports "because of America's hostile policy," according to Libyan leader Col. Muammar Qadhafi.

In an interview with Reuters, Col. Qadhafi recalled that he had forced withdrawal of U.S. bases shortly after coming to power in a bloodless coup in 1969.

Since then, he said, Libya had received no U.S. or Soviet warships. "But we are with difficulty keeping to this position," he said.

"Frankly, the hostile policy of the U.S. may force us to permit the fleets of the Soviet Union to be supplied from Libyan ports."

He said he believed Egypt, armed by the United States and having made a U.S.-inspired agreement with Israel, was now preparing for war against Libya.

Attacking Libya, said Col. Qadhafi, was Egypt's "basic goal."

"In these circumstances, to defend ourselves we must approach more and more the Soviet Union. This is not our desire, but we will be forced to do it."

The Libyan leader emphasised that despite this, his policy remained one of neutrality, as he believed Libya, like other Arab countries, was an objective of the superpowers.

"I think the whole world is threatened by the superpowers. Therefore we must strengthen positive neutrality."

We must work to build up cooperation between Europe and Africa through the Mediterranean," Col. Qadhafi said.

He acknowledged that he was far more critical of the west than of the Soviet bloc.

"American policy has made us closer to the Soviet Union than to the United States."

"The Soviet Union is against the Israelis, the U.S. is pro-Israeli."

"The United States will not sell us even a tape recorder. The Soviet Union sells military planes to us. How can we be nearer to the United States in this position?"

Israeli team in Cairo to arrange Begin, Sadat Arish rendezvous

CAIRO, May 22 (R)--The director of Israeli Premier Menachem Begin's bureau, Dr. Eliahu Ben Elissar arrived here today to discuss arrangements for Mr. Begin's visit to Al Arish.

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Mr. Begin will attend celebrations of handing back the Sinai capital to Egypt on Friday under the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

Dr. Elissar was greeted on arrival by Mr. Hassan Kamal, director of President Sadat's bureau.

Dr. Ben-Elissar is accompanied by Brigadier General Ephraim Poran, Mr. Begin's military aide, Mr. Rehavam Amir, foreign ministry chief of protocol, and officials of the Israeli government press office.

Dr. Ben-Elissar said they would be returning to Israel later tonight, after talks with Egyptian officials including Mr. Hassan Kamel head of president Sadat's bureau.

Husak pledges continued firm stand by Arab rights

DAMASCUS, May 22 (R)--Czechoslovak President Gustav Husak said today the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty obstructed the achievement of a just settlement in the Middle East.

Mr. Husak, speaking at a banquet given by Syrian President Hafez Al Assad, said Czechoslovakia would continue to stand firmly by Arab rights.

"Israeli aggression and occupation are a hotbed of tension in the Middle East," he said.

Mr. Husak, who arrived in Damascus yesterday on a four-day state visit, called for a comprehensive solution of the problem and added: "The Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty only constituted a retreat in the face of the aggressor and does not respect the wishes and interests of the Arab peoples. It only serves imperialist and Zionist interests."

He said Czechoslovakia believed a just settlement in the area should be based on total Israeli withdrawal from occupied Arab territories and recognition of Palestinian rights, including the establishment of an independent Palestinian state.

President Assad said in his speech at the banquet that peace in the Middle East could not be achieved through bilateral agreements.

He said latest developments had shown the agreement was "a plot to impose surrender on the Arabs, betray their right and divide their front."

The two leaders held talks earlier today and an official statement said the Middle East situation and means of developing bilateral relations had been discussed.

Begin, Thatcher to discuss Mideast, bilateral relations

LONDON, May 22 (R)--Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin arrived in London today for a three-day private visit during which he will meet new Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and discuss upcoming Palestinian autonomy talks with U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance.

Mr. Begin's stay in the British capital is being marked by extremely tight security.

A meeting scheduled for tomorrow with Mrs. Thatcher will be the first contact between Israel's coalition government and Britain's new Conservative leadership, which came to power after winning the May 3 election.

Before leaving Tel Aviv, Mr. Begin told reporters his talks with Mrs. Thatcher would concern Middle East and bilateral matters.

On Thursday, he will meet Mr. Vance to discuss expanded Egyptian-Israeli peace talks opening the next day in Beersheba.

After his meeting with Mr. Begin, Mr. Vance will fly to Cairo to confer with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat before heading the U.S. team at the opening session of the expanded talks.

Mr. Begin, President Sadat and Mr. Vance will all meet on Sunday for ceremonies marking the return of the Sinai coastal town of Al Arish to Egypt after 12 years of Israeli occupation and the opening of a direct air corridor between Egypt and Israel.

During his stay, Mr. Begin will also meet British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington and hold a press conference tomorrow.

Britain announces Rhodesia, Namibia diplomatic initiatives

LONDON, May 22 (R)-- Britain today announced a two-pronged diplomatic initiative aimed at easing Rhodesia towards legal independence.

Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington told the (Upper) House of Lords a top official would be sent to Salisbury to maintain contact with the new government of Bishop Abel Muzorewa.

Another British embassy -- expected to be a senior politician--will travel to Africa to talk to other nations involved in the Rhodesia dispute.

Lord Carrington described the new Conservative government's moves as "the first significant steps towards a return to legality in conditions of the widest possible international recognition..."

The British foreign secretary, in office less than three weeks, announced another closely-related African initiative.

Mr. Richard Luce, a deputy foreign minister, left London tonight to discuss the the Namibia (South West Africa) situation with officials in Lusaka, Cape Town and the Namibian capital of Windhoek, he said.

Officials told Reuters that U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance was informed of the British moves during talks with Lord Carrington here yesterday. Their discussions will resume tomorrow.

According to opinion polls

Canada's election may not produce majority

OTTAWA, May 22 (R)--Canadians began voting today in general elections that opinion polls say may not produce a majority government to fight the crisis spawned by resurgent separatism in French-speaking Quebec.

A record turnout of more than 10 million, out of 15 million voters was forecast for a vote in which veteran Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau faces a serious prospect of defeat after 11 years in power.

Late pre-election surveys showed his Liberal Party, dominant in Canada for all but six of the past 44 years, exactly tied in popularity with the Progressive Conservatives led by relative newcomer Joe Clark.

If predictions are borne out, neither party will have the 142 seats needed for an absolute majority in the newly-expanded 282-seat House of Commons.

In that event, one party would form a minority government, depending on the support of a third party for survival -- and perhaps precipitating another election within months.

The most likely partner in a minority government is the centre-left New Democratic Party, led by former college professor Ed Broadbent. He has refused to name his conditions for supporting either of the two big parties.

The urgent priority for any government will be the forthcoming referendum in Quebec called by the separatist government of Rene Levesque on its plans to secede from the 112-year-old Canadian Confederation.

Carter to send teams to cut staffs in U.S. embassies

WASHINGTON, May 22 (R)--President Carter said today he will send a team of experts abroad soon to determine if U.S. embassies could improve performance by cutting staffs.

He told a group of federal employees that the retiring ambassadors to Egypt and Switzerland had complained that their staffs were too large.

Big bucks and boycotts

ONE OF THE fruits of the Camp David peace treaty for Israel is that the Israelis will receive, courtesy of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, two military airfields, to be built in the Naqab (Negev), to replace those which Israel is giving up in returning Sinai to Egypt.

We can only speculate about the uses to which Israel will put these airbases in future. What is interesting is that the Corps of Engineers has now formed two consortia of eight American construction companies to plan and build these airbases, and that, virtually without exception, the companies involved are those which to date have undertaken large construction projects across the Arab World.

For example, in the consortium to be known as "Negev Airbase Constructors," we find Perini Corporation of Framingham, Massachusetts, which has previously done work in Kuwait and Saudi Arabia; Harbert Construction Corporation of Birmingham, Alabama and Paul N. Howard Company of Greensboro, North Carolina, who in an earlier joint venture built a $55 million water pipeline in Abu Dhabi; and Louis Berger International of East Orange, New Jersey, which is currently doing a massive transport study, funded by USAID, in Syria.

In the other consortium, "Air Base Constructors," we find Guy F. Atkinson of San Francisco, which does 75 per cent of its business abroad and which has previously done work in Saudi Arabia, together with the Dillingham Corporation of Hawaii (no known previous Arab work), Nello L. Teer of Durham, North Carolina, which has done projects in Egypt and has been looking at others in the Arab World, and the consultants Tippetts-Abbett-McCarthy-Stratton (TAMS) of New York, who are currently working in Syria and here in Jordan.

According to reports from Washington, normal bidding procedures were suspended in putting together these consortia because of the "time constraints" of the Israeli project.

The question which inevitably asks itself is: how do these companies expect to continue garnering lucrative projects, not to mention goodwill, from Arab states when they are about to build $1,000 million worth of military facilities for the Israelis under the terms of a bogus peace treaty which has done nothing to curb the expansionist Israeli appetite and which the entire Arab World has rejected?

The more immediate question is: what does the Arab Boycott Office in Damascus propose to do about these companies, which have earned millions of dollars, and often a substantial share of their turnover, from Arab projects (whether commissioned by Arab parties or, as in the case of the Corps of Engineers, by outside agencies)?

The Arab World has just spent considerable effort agonising over boycott measures which are being applied against Egypt. What moral force can that boycott have if the longstanding one against the Israeli enemy is erratically or incompletely applied?

ARAB PRESS COMMENTARY

AL RA'I NEWSPAPER TUESDAY refers to the conflicting stands of Egypt and Israel with regard to the autonomy negotiations which are scheduled to start on Friday. It says the negotiations are bound to fail due to the divergence of views between the two sides over the future of the occupied Arab territories and the hardening of Israel's position on the issue.

President Sadat could be the last one to realise that Israel intends to expropriate a further 1,150 dunums of Arab land around Nablus and Hebron in the West Bank in order to establish 30 new settlements to accommodate some 85,000 settlers, the paper writes.

Sadat's pretence of adhering to a comprehensive settlement to cover up for his treachery by no means helps to solve the Middle East problem, because the Egyptian leader has betrayed the Arab nation and sold Palestine in exchange for the separate treaty with Israel, the paper says.

Despite the talks about the coming Beersheba and Al Arish negotiations, there is no question, the paper adds, that Israel does not need Sadat now as she considers the issue an internal affair: Sadat is only needed to sign as witness to the process of annexation.

AL DUSTOUR newspaper also writes about the autonomy negotiations between Israel and Egypt on Friday. Referring to the Israeli cabinet decision on Monday which endorsed Begin's self-rule plan, the paper says the last act of the Camp David comedy has now come to light with the Israeli cabinet endorsing the prohibition of a Palestinian state and the extension of Israel's dominance over the whole of Palestine after the completion of the five-year term of self-rule.

The autonomy negotiations are bound to be a farce because they are being held against the will of the Palestinian people who, after five years of so-called self-rule will find themselves swallowed up completely by Israel, the paper writes.

It adds that though it is easy to understand the Israeli ambitious designs, one can't imagine a single reason for Egypt's involvement in them. The participation of the United States in the comedy, says the paper, causes her to lose credibility in the Arab World which now has begun to doubt her real intention regarding the Palestinian people and their problem.

Jordan, the paper concludes, has often called the world's attention to the ambiguity of the Camp David agreements and it is about Israel's settlement policy which is a preamble to a full usurpation of the whole of Palestine.

Jordan to purchase automatic switchboard

Queen Noor visits Azraq

AZRAQ, May 22 (JNA)--Her Majesty Queen Noor today toured the Shoumari reserve for rare animals, which is run by the Royal Society for the Conservation of Nature.

She inspected the various sections of the reserve and was briefed on the society's programmes for breeding rare animals such as the Arabian gazelle and oryx.

The Queen also toured the pools and bird-hunting areas in the Azraq oasis as well as the water pumping stations there. Later, the Queen visited the adjoining park, and heard a briefing from Director of Tourism Michael Hamameh on plans for developing the area into a tourist centre.

Jordan will be able to dial direct to any city in the country, other Arab states and, soon thereafter, to Europe, thanks to an automatic computerised switchboard Jordan has agreed to purchase from a French company.

Minister of Communications Said Al Tell, acting on behalf of the Telecommunications Corporation as chairman of the corporation's board, signed a contract today with the Paris based company Thomson-CSF for the purchase and installation of a computerised switching centre, commonly called a "gateway" in telecommunications jargon. The contract is valued at $7.5 million.

The switchboard will automatically connect telephone exchanges within Jordan and with all other countries with similar telephone exchange capabilities. Syria and Saudi Arabia will be the first countries Jordan will connect with. Other Arab states will soon join the list and, as soon as enough extra telephone lines are added to the system, callers will be able to dial direct to Europe.

The contract calls for the switchboard to go into operation in 18 months. It also covers installation, technical backup and training of local personnel.

The unit will be located in a specially constructed building at Abdali.

The King was accompanied by Crown Prince Hassan, the Chief of the Royal Court Sharif Abdul Hamid Sharaf, the Court Minister Amer Khamash and the Chief Chamberlain Prince Ra'd Ibn Zaid.

Also visiting the Arabiyat family on the occasion were Prime Minister Mudar Badran, several cabinet members and senior government officials.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

UNRWA Activities Day

Dear Sir,

On behalf of the UNRWA staff in Jordan who are participating in the "Activities Day" at the Amman Training Centre on May 31, 1979, I should like to thank you for the article which appeared in your issue of May 20-21. However, I must draw attention to the inaccuracy of the first paragraph of this article.

First of all, the UNRWA staff are not seeking to obtain contributions for UNRWA--nor will the Agency's deficit be affected in any way. Instead the staff hope, as their contribution to the International Year of the Child, to make donations to benefit refugee children in Jordan, either by assisting camping for orphan children, by purchasing additional children's books for libraries or by other similar means.

Secondly, although funds for the Agency are not in fact involved in the Activities Day, I must stress that the Agency would not decide "to put a more light hearted face on its efforts to raise funds".

The Agency's present deficit for 1979 is $36.5 million and the consequences which would ensue if no further significant contributions are received this year are extremely grave and would touch upon hundreds of thousands of persons in the area of the Agency's operation. In no way can such a possible eventuality be treated except in a sober and serious manner.

The UNRWA staff are organising this "Activities Day", although they realise that a structural part of the Agency's education programme is at present in jeopardy. No decision to suspend or curtail part of this programme has been taken, but it is essential that additional funds of a substantial nature be received in the very near future if the Agency's services are not to be further reduced. Needless to say, every effort to secure additional funds is being made in cooperation with the governments concerned, and it is hoped that these efforts will be successful.

Yours faithfully,

John W. Tanner

India refutes disturbance report

Dear Sir,

Please refer to the item "Muslims Protest Killing of 500 in India" in your esteemed newspaper of May 18.

Stray incidents of communal disturbances in some parts of India are a result of our historical imperialist legacy. A majority of the communal incidents over the last decade took place on very flimsy and trivial grounds. There is no deep-rooted conflict between majority and minority communities in India. In fact most of these incidents took place on grounds not related to sanctity of religion -- rumours, disputes over land, etc. Their distorted interpretation has led to exaggerated publicity.

Jamshedpur incidents started on April 11, and were brought under control by April 13. Home Minister and Foreign Minister visited Jamshedpur on April 13. There was a debate on these incidents in both Houses of Parliament and members belonging to all political parties and communities condemned these incidents.

According to the Home Minister's statement in the Parliament, 110 people, both Hindu and Muslims, were killed, 325 wounded, and not, repeat not, 500 killed and 1,000 wounded as the memorandum pointed out. Some anti-social elements were arrested. No mosques were burnt. The Council of Islamic Organisations and Societies Delegation was informed by the Ambassador that the figures available with them were magnified. The Delegation admitted that their sources of information was not India but some other country.

Arrangements for relief were made immediately by the government and voluntary bodies from all sects and religions. Temporary constructions were put up to house people. Materials were provided. All possible assistance was given to the victims of the disturbances. The Chief Minister of Bihar appointed a three-member tribunal to look into the disturbances and announced a programme of rehabilitation which included all aspects.

The concerned authorities have always been vigilant and prompt in preventing and even stopping such incidents in time. There is no doubt about the seriousness of the government to prevent these occurrences. A non-aligned Minorities Commission with a wide mandate for protection of minorities had been set up. A high-powered committee headed by the Deputy Prime Minister, consisting of the Home Minister, Chief Ministers, leaders of Opposition parties, among others, has also been set up to find a solution to communal problems.

As our Ambassador had mentioned in an interview with Jordan's Al Akhbar news paper on Jan. 26, 1979, several measures are being taken to promote national integration and harmony between different religions which form part of India's policy where all religions enjoy full freedom with constitutional guarantee.

Yours faithfully,

ECONOSCOPE

Petrodollars, pounds and oil revenues

By Jawad Ahmad

A REPORT in the Financial Times of May 19 aroused my curiosity. It concerned a court battle between the two leading gambling casinos in London, Ladbroke's and the Playboy Club. Playboy, which has been facing stiff competition from Ladbroke's, filed a suit against Ladbroke's accusing them of trespassing on Playboy territory.

The court case is not my main concern. But the figures which were quoted by the Financial Times indicate that the pre-tax profits of the three leading gambling casinos in England were £8.2 million in 1975, £32.3 million in 1976 and £39 million in 1977. The money exchanged for chips (called the drop) in the leading casinos increased from £225 million in 1972/73 to £477 million in 1975/76. The figure then jumped to £680 million in 1976/77 and to £730 million in 1977/78.

There was a sneaky remark that Playboy was counting on its gambling profits to cover its deficit in pornographic publications. This is made possible by the large number of Arab gamblers flocking to London casinos to squander their petrodollars.

There is no point in denying the fact that considerable amounts of Arab money are lost at the gambling tables not only in London, but also in Paris, Monte Carlo, and Las Vegas. But why this sneak attack on Arabs?

Well, it coincides with the general mood in Europe and the United States of resentment of the Arab stand on oil pricing. Moreover, it serves the ambitions of Israel to perpetuate its occupation of Arab territories and control their resources. Some facts may be warranted at this juncture. First, the oil-producing Arab states are paying more than 7.5 per cent of their GNP's in aid to other developing countries. By contrast, the more generous industrialised Western country is paying more than 1 per cent.

There is also an overemphasis on Arab wealth. The total GNP of small oil-producing states barely adds up to that of Holland.

Another fact is that most oil revenues stashed away in Western banks. Some of the money is recycled to other Arab countries via Euro-dollar market at commercial rates. Meanwhile, the purchasing power of these resources is diminishing day by day, and no one is pointing finger at those losses which are at least ten times greater as the money spent on gambling.

The gambling casinos of London, Monte Carlo and Las Vegas were not meant when they were first established, to accommodate the Arab gaming craze. Actually, they were built to meet whims of Europeans and Americans. Why criticise them?

I am not defending the idea of Arabs going away large sums of money. But the same levelled against Arabs in the Western media. Not all Arabs are gamblers and not all of them are happy with what is happening to their money.

Now, what if the Arab countries were to what Iran has done? Would the Western media be happier with the Arabs? The answer is obvious.

first facilities in

Azraq Three months ago a large new resthouse was opened. Attached to the resthouse are 24 comfortable cottages that will be rented for JD 3.5 per night; they are merely waiting for the installation of air conditioning units for them to be ready for occupancy. Each pair of two-bed cabins can be interconnected. The buildings all have an attractive Arab motif. A large swimming pool being constructed between the two rows of cabins is expected to be completed in three months.

One hundred metres away an open-air bath-fed by a sulphur-rich hot spring—has been built with several picnic tables scattered around it.

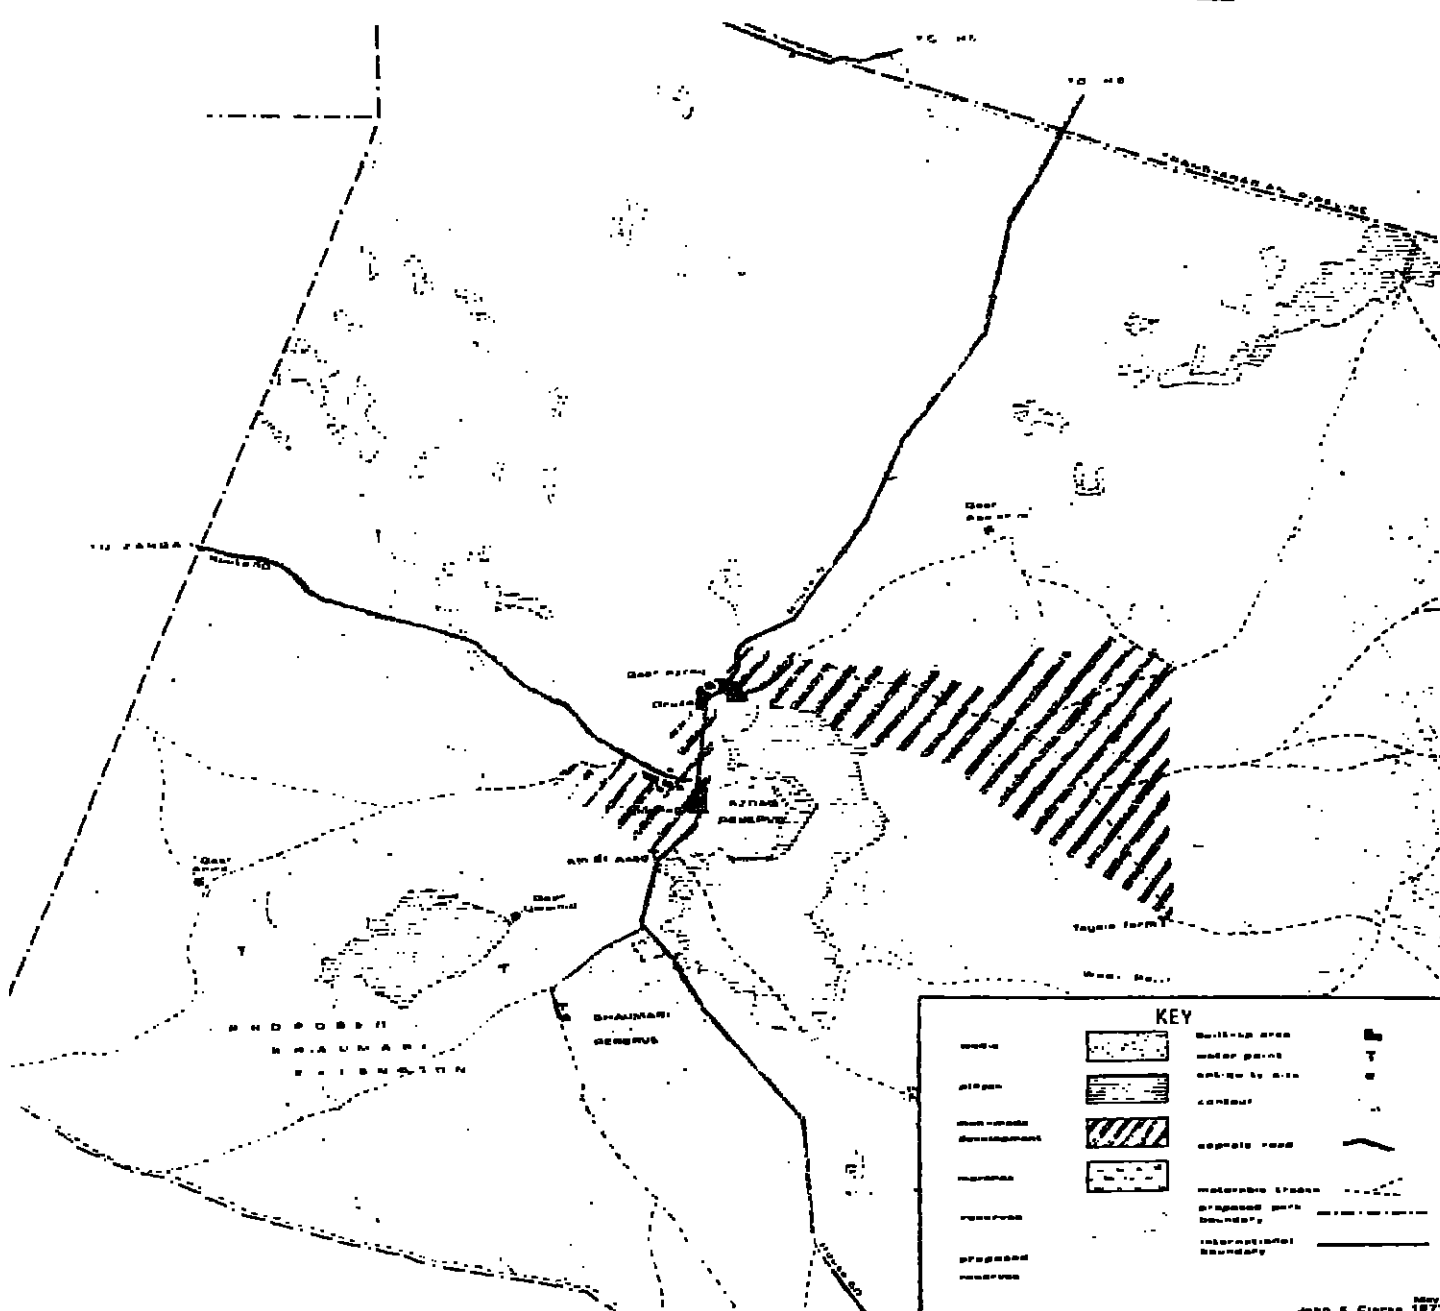

These new facilities are located in what is called the Azraq National Park, the entrance to which turns off from the road that connects the Shishan village to the Druse village. (National park is actually a misnomer since no law for national parks in Jordan exists at present). There are only a few trees in the vicinity of the new resthouse at present but, according to Mr. Hamarnah, "thousands of trees are to be planted in the area." There is nothing to break the calm of the expanse of desert that runs out from the water and vegetation of the oasis as far as the eye can see.

As the Azraq Oasis is Jordan's only permanent body of standing water in 12,000 square miles of desert, it is, understandably, a favourite place for a picnic and swim. At present, however, the facilities for these activities are grossly inadequate to meet the growing need. With the opening of the new road, busloads of school-children descend on the oasis on Fridays and holidays. They are attracted to the pools of water that have not been fenced off, as is the case with those that form part of the water supply pumped to Irbid.

These pools are often not clean. They are surrounded by areas reduced to mud flats by flooding and the frequent passage of vehicles. The water and surroundings are littered with trash left behind by careless picnickers or simply dumped there. This desecration of the natural beauty of the spot has reached the stage where unless some action is taken soon it will take a great deal of work to undo the damage. Mr. Hamarnah indicated that future plans call for the addition of picnic tables and toilet facilities. (Another idea is to build trails that weave between the pools that form part of the oasis.)

Once there was an abundance of animals that populated the desert surrounding Azraq. Among those who enjoyed hunting these animals were Omayyad Caliphs and Princes who left their magnificent palaces in Damascus to spend months in castles built specially to suit hunting wild ass and other species as the frescoes at Qusayr Amrah clearly testify.

Except for smaller, usually nocturnal creatures such as hares and foxes, the game is long since gone. To remedy this the Royal Society for the Conservation of Nature (RSCN) has set up the Shaumari Reserve for rare animals near Azraq. At present it has several Arabian gazelles and seven of the now very rare Arabian oryx— which, ironically, had to be imported from Qatar and the United States. The reserve is presently in the process of acquiring wild asses from Iran and ostriches from America.

The RSCN has ambitious plans. The government has agreed to expand the area of the Shaumari Reserve from the present 22 square metres to 300 square metres, and part of the oasis has been set aside as the Azraq Wetland Reserve.

RSCN's work can only progress slowly because of the limited funds available to the society. However running the resthouse and cabins used by the hunters, which can accommodate up to 30 persons, brings in some income during the hunting season (generally from October to March). Members of the society pay JD 3 and non-members pay JD 5 to spend the night in one of the cabins.

Azraq Castle, located in the Druse village of Azraq, was built of black basalt rock by the Romans in 300 A.D. and has particular interest because of its historical significance in the Arab revolt against Turkey during the First World War. T.E. Lawrence (of Arabia) and Ali Ibn Al Hussein—one of the sons of Hussein Ibn Ali, Sherif of Mecca and leader of the revolt—made the castle their northern headquarters in Jordan: "for progress" sake we determined to hold to Azraq. Partly it would be a preaching base, from which to spread our movement in the North; partly it would be a centre of intelligence," writes Lawrence in his autobiographical "Seven Pillars of Wisdom".

The Ministry of Tourism has carried out repairs on the castle so that the modern visitor will not have to suffer the inconveniences that forced the Arabs to go to great lengths to make it possible to winter there during the revolt. The castle was built strategically at the edge of the oasis and "few men would venture either over the labyrinth of lava or through the marshes—the two approaches to our fortress," wrote Lawrence. One of the castle's unique features is that the two entrances can be sealed off by doors made of solid slabs of basalt rock a foot thick with pivots cut into them which swivel in sockets cut into the threshold and lintel.

At present Azraq is very apparently on the verge of a significant change. With great potential for development, it is also susceptible to abuse by the crowds that are rushing to it down the newly built road. The words of T.E. Lawrence on entering Azraq on camel-back over 60 years ago are a suitable reminder of its value of yore and may be a suitable context for its future development: "Of Azraq as of Rumm, one said 'Numen mest' (the spirit of God is here). Both were magically haunted; but whereas Rumm was vast and echoing and God-like, Azraq's unfathomable silence was steeped in knowledge of wandering poets, champions, lost kingdoms, all the crime and chivalry and dead magnificence of Hira and Ghassan. Each stone or blade of it was radiant with half-memory of the luminous silky Eden, which had passed so long ago."

The doors at Qasr Azraq are made of solid slabs of basalt. They still can be opened and closed.

Curfew on West Bank refugee camp lifted

OCCUPIED JERUSALEM, May 22 (R) — A two-week-old curfew on the Palestinian refugee camp of Aida near Bethlehem was lifted yesterday by the military governor of the occupied West Bank.

The 22-hour-a-day curfew was imposed after residents were said to have set fire to an army vehicle after the driver was forced to flee.

Mayors of West Bank towns had protested to the Defence Minister about the curfew.

Military government sources said an inquiry had begun into a meeting in Nablus three weeks ago of 17 mayors and village chairmen who gathered without permission to protest against the planned seizure of 875 acres (350 hectares) of land near the village of Salfit in the Nablus region. The land will be used to expand the nearby Jewish settlement of Ariel.

Under military government regulations West Bank leaders are not allowed to gather for political purposes.

(See special report on West Bank colonisation, page 1)

Defence Ministry sources said Defence Minister Ezer Weizman had refused to sign the requisition order for the land, saying it was not needed for security purposes.

Mr. Weizman intended to raise the issue in cabinet.

Military government sources said a number of the mayors had been prevented from visiting Jordan until after the inquiry.

But West Bank sources said the ban aimed at preventing them meeting the U.N. commission investigating conditions on the West Bank. Its members, who arrived in Amman on Sunday, have not been allowed to visit Israel or Israeli-controlled territory, they said.

New excavations in Syria to delve into Ugaritic, Akkadian mysteries

By Pat McDonnell
Special to the Jordan Times

DAMASCUS—Dr. Pierre Bordreuil has two sets of acquaintances in Syria: his colleagues involved in excavations at Ras Shamra and Ras Ibn Hani and the residents of those Ugaritic sites who wrote letters more than three millennia ago.

A specialist in West Semitic languages, Dr. Bordreuil is the field epigrapher for the Ras Shamra and Ras Ibn Hani expeditions and, over the years, he has come to feel well acquainted with the Ugaritic kings, queens and citizens whose letters he deciphers.

Dr. Bordreuil makes his home in Beirut, but he is affiliated with the Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique, Paris. He is in Damascus to translate tablets recovered from Ras Ibn Hani before the joint Syrian-French expedition begins excavations there next month.

He explains that both sites are second millennium Late Bronze Age in which there were two scripts: the earlier syllabic cuneiform Akkadian script and the simpler Ugaritic alphabetic script, containing less than 30 letters.

Dr. Bordreuil translates the alphabetic script and another specialist deciphers the Akkadian tablets recovered at both sites.

which are about five kilometres apart on the Mediterranean coast of Syria.

"Whereas Ugarit (Ras Shamra) was a very large, ancient city that developed haphazardly during generations of expansion, Ras Ibn Hani is neatly laid out on a promontory of the coast," he said.

"We reason that Ras Ibn Hani was built as a lookout point for the Ugaritic inhabitants of the coast. The walls and structures are carefully laid out on a northwest-southeast orientation."

The Late Bronze Age city of Ugarit was totally devastated during the invasions of the Sea Peoples, circa 1200 B.C., but Ras Ibn Hani appears to have been populated for another 30 or 40 years after that judging by pottery recovered there. The ceramics date to the Mycenaean period.

Excavation began in 1929 at Ugarit and the West Semitic alphabetic texts discovered there were deciphered in 1930. Alphabetic tablets have been found in eight other regions including Ras Ibn Hani, Mt. Tabor (Haifa), Homs, the West Bank, and Lebanon.

So far, only 60 tablet fragments have been recovered from Ras Ibn Hani: 30 in 1977 and 30 in 1978. "These were recovered from the southern palace which was destroyed by fire. The tablets were broken and scattered when the roof of the building caved in. Perhaps this year we'll find more fragments to fit together," Dr. Bordreuil said.

The 1979 season also holds promise to find even more archives when excavation begins of the smaller northern palace.

The texts deal with mythology, rituals, political letters and lists of place names. In regard to the latter, Dr. Bordreuil has determined the names of the first king of Ugarit, Yagaru, and the first letter in the name of the last king of Ugarit.

"In terms of rituals, we have found a tablet that mentions the king's sacrifice of an animal to a god (see photo). The god, Rashof, is mentioned and, after two strokes, the same type of sacrifice is offered to the goddess Anat: 'When the king sees Rashof high, a nose and a throat, silver and gold... When the king sees Anat of slth, nose and a throat, silver and gold."

Of the 70 proper names deciphered from the Ras Ibn Hani tablets, 60 are well known at Ugarit.

Dr. Bordreuil, who has been associated with the Ras Shamra excavations since 1971, says women clearly enjoyed important positions in both cities.

"The tablets record transactions in which women were selling and buying houses and fields," he said. "Texts report sacrifices performed by a queen and there are two letters that were sent to 'The Queen, my Mother.'"

"At Ras Shamra, a man often bore the family name of his mother. He probably took her name if her family ranked higher than his father's family," he added.

One set of texts signifies a rather tragic circumstance for a queen, however. "It seems the queen deserted her husband and returned to her family," Dr. Bordreuil said. Several of the texts record the king's efforts to have the family return his wife. Finally, after a great sum of money was paid, the family returned her — presumably for her execution at the hands of the king. But who knows, perhaps it was a true love story and he merely wanted her with him again. Only more tablets can tell us the outcome."

Dr. Bordreuil says the expert on Akkadian script has also translated texts which refer to a powerful queen of Ras Ibn Hani.

"At Ras Shamra, we often found official texts in very modest homes. The only explanation for finding portions of the royal archives in simple dwellings is that, much like businessmen of today, the scribes took their work home at night."

A graduate of the Sorbonne, Dr. Bordreuil is publishing many of the West Semitic texts in cooperation with Prof. Andre Caquot of the College de France.

"Unfortunately for us, during the first millennium B.C., the Canaanites switched to the much easier medium of writing on papyrus and leather. These documents have not been preserved and so we know the Late Bronze Age much better than we do later periods because the clay texts are indestructible."

The clay tablet from Ras Ibn Hani relating the king's sacrifice to the god Rashof and goddess Anat in the alphabetic Ugaritic script deciphered by Dr. Pierre Bordreuil.

Israeli-settled land was privately owned

The most dramatic finding of the report is that over 90 per cent of the land seized by Israel in the occupied West Bank for the purpose of establishing Jewish colonies since 1967 is privately owned Palestinian land. Less than ten per cent is state land, while the Israelis claim that their settlements are located on state lands.

In any case, the distinction between private or public lands is in itself meaningless, in view of the clear illegality of creating any Jewish settlements in occupied areas, according to article four of the Geneva Convention and U.N. resolutions governing territories occupied by military force.

The survey only covers land that is being used for Israeli colonies, and does not include other areas seized for Israeli military bases or fenced off for unspecified military or "security" reasons, such as the Zhor area along the Jordan River, or large plots of land in the eastern highlands of the West Bank overlooking the valley.

Based on criteria explained below, the survey found that out of an estimated 125,630 dunums of cultivable land forcibly expropriated by Israel for the exclusive use of its civilian colonies, 11,816 dunums was state land, and 113,814 dunums was private property. That is, 90.6 per cent of the seized colonised land was taken from private landowners, while only 9.4 per cent was state land.

"The Israeli claims that no private lands have been grabbed for construction of civilian colonies is not supported by evidence in the field," a member of the survey team told the Jordan Times in Amman this week.

The categories of land ownership included under private lands are:

- (a) "mulk" land, or private land where the owners have clear title deeds;
- (b) "miri" land, which has been actively cultivated for generations by the farmers and registered at the Ministry of Finance for land tax purposes;
- and (c) "jiftik" or "mudawwar" lands, which have been also actively cultivated by Palestinian farmers and which in the 19th Century were nominally under the title of the Ottoman Sultan, and have been recognised by the British and Jordanian governments as private lands. Before 1967, the Jordanian government was carrying out surveys in the West Bank to issue title deeds to the farmers who were cultivating these lands.

The categories of land included under state ownership or what are called "public domain" lands, include the following:

- (a) "mawar" land, or waste land, including desert, forests, and rocky uncultivated mountain tops not owned by individuals;
- (b) lands which were the sites of British Mandate Taggart forts and Jordanian police or army camps;
- and (c) lands which have been designated for community purposes, such as parks and hospitals.

Members of the team that compiled the survey also explained the "patterns and processes" of land seizure by Israelis for the exclusive purpose of building Jewish colonies "that are euphemistically called settlements."

They said that the process by which lands under cultivation by Palestinians are seized and transferred for use by Israeli colonies begins with the erection by the Israeli armed forces of boundary markers or barbed wire fences which define the area to be seized. The military governor or his representative then informs the leaders of the village which owns the land that for "security" reasons they are not allowed to enter the closed areas.

"Now, if it happens that this closed area has crops or fruit-bearing trees, the Israelis over the last 11 years of occupation have systematically destroyed, bulldozed, defoliated, uprooted, and cut down such crops and trees. This planned destruction has taken place invariably in almost all the areas that included seizure of privately-owned cultivated land," the sources told the Jordan Times.

In fact, the destruction of Palestinian homes and crops began right after the 1967 war, with the seizure of 20,000 dunums of cultivated land in the Latrun salient belonging to three villages (Beit Nuba, Yalu, and Imwas) which were completely erased. Now the colony of Mevo Horon rests on the ruins of Beit Nuba and these Israeli colonisers are now cultivating the lands of these three villages, they said.

The compilers of the survey cited the following further examples of destruction of Palestinian crops and houses prior to the transfer of these lands to Israeli civilian colonies.

Case No. 1, 1967. Destruction of the villages of Al Ajlun, Jiftik in the Jordan Valley — now the site of the colony of Ma'ale Adumim.

Case No. 2, 1967. Destruction of the village of Makhrouk in Jordan Valley, and seizure of six operating wells — now the site of a colony of Argaman which is using the wells and cultivating the land of the villagers of Makhrouk.

Case No. 3, 1968. Houses destroyed and vineyards uprooted the villagers from Artas (near Bethlehem) — now the site of a colony of Alon Shevot.

Case No. 4, 1970. Houses destroyed and irrigated tomato fields bulldozed for the farmers from Frush Beit Dajan — now the site of a colony of Hamra.

Case No. 5, 1972. Wheatfields defoliated by planes for farmers from Akkraba — now these same lands are cultivated by settlers from Giti.

Case No. 6, 1977. Wheatfields for the farmers from I bulldozed — now the colony of Roi is cultivating these same lands.

Case No. 7, 1977. Six-hundred 15-year-old plum trees belonging to the farmers from Beit Umur cut down — now these lands are being prepared for use by the colony of Migdal Oz.

Case No. 8, 1978. Wheatfields of the farmers from Beit bulldozed — now these same lands are being cultivated by the colony of Mekhora.

Case No. 9, May 1979. This week, as the U.N. team is collecting testimony, wheatfields belonging to the farmers from Akkraba being bulldozed so that the land will be transferred to the colony Giti, which is now in the process of expansion, or so-called "khening".

After these lands are seized and cleared of their cultivator sources said, the residential, agricultural and industrial infrastructure is established, and civilian settlers are brought in. They take control of the colonies' affairs, as well as "ownership" of the land. The survey compilers also commented that this pattern of land use is not a static process. As the colony grows and more settlers brought in, additional land in the nearby vicinity is taken in the manner as described above; thus, every colony is a continuous to the surrounding Palestinian villages, they said.

The survey listed 12 settlements on the floor of the Jordan Valley and 14 others in the foothills above the valleys. Altogether, the 26 Jordan Valley colonies cover 27,208 dunum land, of which 70,050 dunums is private Palestinian land, and 7,150 is state-owned. That is, some 77 square kilometres (30 square miles) in the Jordan Valley and its foothills is occupied settlements.

There are 29 settlements in the West Bank highlands, covering a total of 34,410 dunums, of which 32,050 dunums is privately owned land and 1,860 is former state land. This is about 34 square kilometres (or 13 square miles) of West Bank highlands controlled by Israeli colonies.

In the Arab East Jerusalem area, eight Jewish settlements cover 14,520 dunums of land, of which 13,714 dunums is privately owned land and 2,806 dunums is state land. That is, about 13 square kilometres (5 square miles) of Jerusalem are controlled by Jewish colonies.

The total for the entire West Bank is 63 Jewish settlements covering 125,630 dunums. This is about 129 square kilometres (49 square miles).

It is important to keep in mind that these figures do not include the lands seized and cleared of their cultivators by the civilian settlements, and do not include the lands that have been "expropriated" or "annexed" by the Israeli occupation authorities. Military reserves, state forests, national parks, and absentee Palestinian land not subject to taxation are not included in the above figures. The report also noted that the areas used by Israeli settlers, the roads and areas added to the colonies, are not included in the above figures. The areas under the control of Israeli occupation authorities would amount to between 25 per cent and 35 per cent of the West Bank, the compilers told the Jordan Times.

(A new Jordanian government report issued in January 1979, and Western sources, which has been disseminated in the last few months, states more precisely that 25 per cent of the West Bank land has been brought under direct Israeli control, and that the West Bank's 5.5 million dunums.)

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first in a series of reports which the Jordan Times will be publishing this week in connection with the visit of the United Nations team investigating Israeli settlement practices in the occupied Arab territories.

Archaeological surveys and excavations, in Jordan and neighbouring areas, have been revealing some astonishing facts concerning peoples, habitations, occupations and movements. The pictures of all this has been changing for some time; and normally towards becoming clearer. It is true that in many cases the last word has not been said—as it is it may never be said, as long as people differ in their interpretation of finds and facts. But our knowledge has increased considerably.

This article is concerned, in the first place, with a subject which has a technical twist. It deals with the copper industry in the Araba Valley, which seems to have begun some time in the early centuries of the fourth millennium, during the archaeological period known as the Chalcolithic. In this brief survey we shall use words such as "metallurgy" and "industries". I think a word of caution is invited here! When we speak of, or hear about metal works now- adays, the first thing that springs to our minds is the picture of proper "installations" where all kinds of machines are man- ufactured. Even those who had never had the opportunity of being actually within reach of such big plants, must have seen their advertisement pictures, either in the papers or on television. So let us obliterate such pictures from our minds when we speak about "metallurgy and technology" of those remote centuries.

I am inclined to suggest that what should be associated with such words, for those periods of history - nay of prehistory - is more an idea: a step which man took at a certain unknown, and probably unknowable, moment where he used two substances, one harder than the other, thus break- ing the latter into some com- ponents which he later shaped for a new use. The age of metal began, metallurgy was born, but it was just a birth; and a long time sepa- rates birth from maturity. Here we are concerned with birth!

The earliest traces of human settlement in Wadi Araba and the Sinai, particularly in its southern parts, go back to the Chalcolithic Age, and this occupation by peo- ple seems to have continued throughout the Early-Middle Bronze Age, i.e. throughout the fourth and the third millennia B.C. Racial affinities of the people that occupied the habitation sites that have been excavated have not been determined, beyond the possible fact that they were semi- nomadic; but the motive for their coming to this arid, seemingly empty, area has been, more or less, ascertained.

Extracting of turquoise (mainly in Sinai) and mining of copper, this covering the larger area. Then came the transport of both to the areas desirous of having them. Some time in the third millennium walike people moved about the area. Were they migrating people who, for one reason or another, preferred this route to the more northerly - the Nile Delta - Pales- tine coastal route? Or were they people who came out of the North Arabia desert lands, seeking more prosperous regions and thus fol- lowed this shorter passage to Egypt? Migrations and penet- ration of ancient peoples remain interesting, although thorny sub- jects; and this one is not the least to which the description may apply.

During this period copper- hungry people looked for "copper ore nodules", which were picked when washed away from their original stone formation, or were actually quarried in much the same way stone is quarried. But even shaft mining seems to have been known then. These "nodules" were available because they existed in fairly large quan- tities.

The copper ore nodules were then taken to places for "dres- sing". This process may be summed up in having the nodules crushed, using granite instru- ments, in the form of heavy mor- tars. Then the ore is separated from the unnecessary residue. Later came smelting which was a more advanced process and needed better organisation.

Thus a copper industry, with an organisation rather astounding for the age, developed in the Araba Valley. But this might have been in existence in the south Jordan mountainous region about the same time, it was known in south- ern Palestine.

Beno Rothenberg has written: "(We) must now consider the Chalcolithic-Early Bronze Age occupation of this huge desert, from the Nile Delta to the Araba, and probably well into the Trans- jordan Plateau and north-west Arabia, as the earliest and ... the most intensive ... phase of history of sedentary occupation in this area ... one may see here in this twin-sided, large-scale, move- ment of copper-smelting and turquoise-mining people into Sinai the natural meeting place of African and Asian cultures in Pre- dynastic times, a cultural land bridge between Africa and Asia."

The Araba copper mining and smelting sites were concentrated mainly in the Mune'iyah (Mene'iy- ch) area, Ain Ghadyan, with its springs and its marshes of Sikkh (salty) et Tabaa, attracted agricul- tural people, who utilized the land during the rainy season, but seem- ingly depended on cisterns which kept rain water.

Beno Rothenberg advances the opinion that perhaps here existed a "seasonal interchange but paral- lel occupation of two different landscapes, by the same people. The food-growing members of the community moving up to the farm- ing areas in the mountains for the rainy season, only to come down again to the central tribal settle- ments ... when drinking water gave out in the mountains."

From the fourteenth to the twelfth centuries Pharaonic Egypt was seriously interested in the Araba copper mines. The local tribes cooperated.

Apparently Sinai copper mines, such as those of Serabit al- Khadim, must have been ex- hausted or nearly so. Copper was more and more in demand, particularly when it was found out that an alloy of it with tin, bronze, proved to be an effective metal for weapons and instruments.

A few interesting matters should be observed in this new enterprise. For one thing there was a careful planning of cisterns, 10-17 metres deep, to retain water for domestic use and for irrigation purposes. As anyone who had lived in our part of the world about fifty years or so ago knows, people in places like Nazareth and Jerusalem in Palestine and Amman and Karak in Jordan, depended on similar cisterns for their water. I remember the rope marks on the mouths of the two cisterns my grandfather had in his house in Nazareth. Rope marks have been found on the mouths of the cisterns of Araba Valley.

Another thing to be remem- bered about the exploitation of copper mines in the area is the fact that camps had stone buildings. These were houses, store rooms and workshops. Tools used were mainly stone tools.

Technologically copper ore was now reduced into metallic copper, which made its manufacture easier, and numerous artistic pieces of jewellery could be pro- duced. The process of reducing the ore into metallic copper meant an advance in the techniques of the workers. It probably also demanded a larger number of workers. In the view of experts on the subject the mining industry was now a large scale enterprise, and it was carried out under the protection of Egyptian forces. In other words it was one of those colonisation projects which served the economic purposes of the state.

People living and working there, whether then or earlier, did have some religious practices. During the Ramassid control of the area, worship of Egyptian gods became predominant, as testified by the existence of a temple for Hathor. But this did not eliminate the worship, cults and rituals of other peoples, who were Semitic in origin. Votive engravings and burial customs have been found which represented the beliefs of Medianites and Amalekites, hel- pers and associates of the Egyp- tians, who controlled, while the former groups provided man- power.

The Egyptian presence there protected routes and caravans. It may be assumed that frankincense which came from southern Arabia by overland route was sent to Egypt under official protection.

What has been of particular interest to archaeologists is Jazirat (the Island of) Faroun at the end of the Gulf of Aqaba. It had cas- mate walls of formidable dimen- sions, it was close to the land, and it had a well protected harbour. "...The men who conceived it, the defensive wall and harbour of Jazirat Faroun, were men of the sea, and the most skilled of the master builders."

The constructions on the island, or at least most of them, belong to a later period than the one we had just discussed. One of the known facts of history that by the late eleventh and early tenth centuries B.C., the Phoenicians became the master sea-traders of the Red Sea (besides being Mediterranean seamen). By that time they had mastered the building trade. Could it be that they were responsi- ble for all this, or most of it?

The Nabateans, masters of trade and commerce and artists in stone, metal, pottery and coins, must have had some interest in copper mining in the Araba Val- ley. But it was when the Romans occupied Petra, early in the sec- ond century A.D., and the new Provincia Arabia, with its capital as Bosra (Bostra), was created that more active copper mining was activated.

The Third Legion Cyrenaica, which had been in Egypt and had had a great deal of mining experi- ence in upper Egypt was sta- tioned, under Hadrian, in Bosra. It is likely that active copper mining in Araba was resumed by this Legion. The Roman road system which con- nected the Red Sea port of Aila with Syria, and also with Sinai, did help this development. The actual workers in the mines and at smelt- ing sites were Christian slaves or convicts.

There were two new methods which the Romans introduced anew into the industry. Firstly they used metal chisels for quar- rying and digging shafts. This probably made it possible for them to dig deeper and reach richer deposits. In the second place the Romans, although allow- ing smaller smelting sites to con- tinue to exist, concentrated on one major smelting site - that of Bir Hindis, where water was available throughout the year.

But the Romans did not restrict their mining activities to the Araba Valley; Feiman and Sinai were utilized.

This tradition of mining was carried on to the fourth century A.D., under the Byzantines, but not at the same. This may be attributed to the lack of sedentary dwellers in the area, a situation which seems to have continued under the early Arab regimes. But under the Mamluks, and particularly from late in the 13th cen- tury, there was a revival in the copper mining in the Araba Val- ley. At Ras Al Naqb there is a smithy, an evidence of Mamluke interest in the matter.

Copper entered into the lives of ancient societies in the Chal- colithic Age, its use spread gradu- ally in the following periods; but the real value of copper became apparent when it was used to pro- duce bronze. But as tin, the other material necessary for the pro- duction of bronze, was rare, the use of this alloy took a long time to fashion the life of people, espe- cially in the field of arms and armour.

Jordan today is planning to increase its economies by utilizing every possible source of the land-soil and subsoil alike. Hence the interest the government of Jordan has in its plans of development concerning the Wadi Araba copper mines. Studies have been made, plans are almost ready, and pilot projects are at hand.

Technology of the twentieth century may be able to get more out of the copper mines of Jordan, but the story of the exploitation of these "copper ore nodules" throughout 3,000 or 6,000 years is certainly a fascinating one--more so because man used stone implements and tools to extract the ore, and depended on char- coal for smelting. This was rather unfortunate because man depleted the area of trees.

to Jordan in 19th Century continuous Russia which was trying to occupy their country. In spite of the bitter and heroic resistance to occupation, at the end of 293 years of war, they were beaten and their country was taken away from them. So these Muslim, Indo-European people had to leave Caucasus, which occupies the area between the Black Sea and the Caspian Sea, in the northern part of the Caucasian Mountains, and emigrate to the Ottoman Empire. Later their southward emigration increased as a result of the agreement reached at the Congress of Berlin in 1878.

At present Circassians are inseparably interwoven into the fabric of Jordanian society, enrich- ing its already interesting texture with the shape and colour of their culture. In spite of the passage of over a century, these shapes and colours are vivid in their social customs, in the different dialects of their language, in their lively yet graceful folk dancing, in the tight- fitting military-like costumes of their men and in the slim-waisted, flowing dresses of their women.

In order to preserve and per- petuate this heritage, the ladies' branch of the Circassian Society, which was established in 1971, started a Circassian School at a rented villa on the way to the Orthodox Club in 1974. The society trained teachers in the Cir- cassian language in order to teach the children their mother tongue in addition to Arabic. English is also taught in this school.

Preparations for last year's school party.

The school opened its doors with only 14 students in 1974. At that time the teaching staff consisted of one teacher and a head- mistress. There was a caretaker at the school who also did the clean- ing. Now, after five years, the school which had started as a nursery and kindergarten offers classes up to the level of 4th grade, having six classes consisting of 130 students. It has a staff of eight teachers and a headmistress. It has three buses to bring children to school and take them back home. But this is not all. The ladies' branch of the Circassian Society received a generous gift from His Majesty King Hussein in 1975. The King gave the society 14

dunums of lands on the way to Na'ur, on the top of a hill, on which to build a new school. The society's active ladies did not waste any time; with almost no funds at hand, they set out to get plans for the buildings, and once these were completed, they col- lected contributions from indi- viduals and institutions, arranged dinner parties, fashion shows and musical evenings, raised the necessary fund in four short years and had the first school building erected. This is one of the three buildings they plan to have even- tually.

This first building's cornerstone was laid by Her Highness Princess Alia, who has been president of the ladies' branch of the Cir- cassian Society since 1978. The inside of the building will be com- pleted before the beginning of next school year. It had originally been planned for the kindergarten students; but for the time being it will be used for the first, second, third, fourth and fifth grades. The kindergarten students will remain next year in the same villa they are now occupying on the way to the Orthodox Club.

"Next year, with God's per- mission," says Mrs. Nabiba Has- san, the acting president of the Circassian Women's Society, "we will continue with the rest of the two buildings." She speaks with great con- fidence. She speaks of sports halls, music rooms, art sections, as if they are already in existence. "There is no doubt in my mind that we will achieve everything we are hoping to achieve," she says. She adds with a trace of smile on her face: "We cannot stop now, can we?" This undemonstrative woman in her early fifties, hides a dynamism which unfailingly inspire the people around her underneath her calm exterior.

The school is also lucky to have Miss Huda Abideh as its head- mistress. Although this dedicated, unassuming young woman has been with the school right from the beginning, there is a freshness and openness about her, as if she were newly appointed.

Her attitude is heart-warming. She expresses her personal aims about the school in these words: "We started this school with a handful of children. We tried to give them the best kind of edu- cation we could imagine. Now, as the years go by, we are learning what more we can give them. We know now that education is not just knowing how to read and write, to do your sums, to know historical facts.

"In addition to this basic edu- cation, the children should be exposed to music and arts to expand their souls; they should be able to do sports in order for their young bodies to develop to heal- thy maturity. Children should be encouraged into idealism, in order to make them serve their com- munity and their country. Jordan, to the best of their ability.

"They should be taught to become straightforward, law- abiding citizens. We encourage these aspects with all our might, by good behaviour and by being respectful of each others' rights at school. The teachers are trying to set good examples, by their dig- nified, and yet gentle manners. The teachers in our school are not allowed to shout at the children and to scold them harshly. We believe that a teacher should gain the respect of her students without having to use any force, otherwise she would lose her own self- respect.

"And lastly, we like our stu- dents to establish strong friend- ships among each other in their early lives. We believe such early friendships will endure, and friends will help each other and support each other later, when faced with the difficulties of life."

Scottish Football League Championship

GLASGOW, Scotland, May 22 (R)—Celtic won the Scottish Football League Championship for the 31st time by scoring four goals in the last 23 minutes for a 4-2 victory over arch-rivals Rangers here last night. The victory in their last match of the season clinched the premier division title for Celtic and provided a bitter disappointment for Rangers, who could have taken the title by drawing last night and winning their two remaining matches. Celtic's triumph capped an amazing comeback for the Glasgow side, who were in dire straits in eighth place halfway through their 36-game league season. Last night they trailed 1-0 at half time to an Alex MacDonald goal, and their chances looked to have disappeared when striker John Doyle was sent off for kicking an opponent after 55 minutes. But they were far from disheartened and they began their fightback in the 67th minute when Roy Aitken squeezed in a shot at the near post. Eight minutes later George McCluskey put them ahead 2-1. Rangers scored to even the match, but Celtic reapplied the pressure and were rewarded five minutes from time when Rangers' Colin Jackson turned a cross from McCluskey into his own net. Then in the final seconds Murdo McLeod connected from the edge of the area. Billy McNeill, in his first season as Celtic's manager, said: "It was a great performance. It was the players' night though I would like to think I helped. I'm delighted for them."

Swiss host 'replay' of World Cup final

BERNE, May 22 (R)—In 1914, the mayor of London issued a proclamation forbidding football in the city, and over 650 years later officials in the same capital still complain regularly about the unruly behaviour of soccer supporters. The city of Berne, nestled near and contented in full view of the magnificent Swiss Alps seems far removed from the clamour of modern football, but tonight it stages a repeat of last year's World Cup final between Argentina and the Netherlands. Perhaps surprisingly, Switzerland was one of the seven founder members of the International Soccer Federation (FIFA) on June 21, 1904. But its real moment of glory came in 1954 when they staged the World Cup, reaching the quarter-finals and grabbing a 3-0 lead against Austria inside the first 20 minutes. Unfortunately, the Swiss collapsed equally dramatically, losing the game 7-5. Despite its lack of success since, Switzerland remains the home of FIFA, which for 75 years with a varying degree of success has governed international soccer. It was FIFA, notably through the drive and vision of French Jules Rimet and Henry Delaunay, who launched the first World Cup in Uruguay in 1930. Since those early days the number of countries affiliated to FIFA has risen dramatically from seven to 146. Soccer, in both the way it is played and presented, has changed enormously. The World Cup has attained a popularity undreamed of by its founders, with millions of fans throughout the world watching last year's tournament in Argentina on television. Eleven months later, opinion is still divided as to the merits of Argentina's triumph, and FIFA hopes a few of the arguments will be settled tonight in the Wankdorf Stadium. Certainly the Netherlands are eager to gain revenge, although Argentina's manager Cesar Luis Menotti, has insisted since his team's arrival that Argentina it is simply another friendly international, with added significance. But despite Menotti's protestations thousands of television viewers in Europe and South America hope to see another full-blooded and exciting clash. Havelange, the Brazilian president of FIFA, will present winners of the match with a special trophy. The game will be decided on penalties if the scores are level after 90 minutes. It has been a momentous week for Mr. Havelange, who has seen FIFA accept his proposals for an increase in the number of teams for the 1982 World Cup in Spain from 16 to 24. Like so many of FIFA's decisions in the past, this one has not met with universal approval with many critics arguing that the championships will be more and far too costly. Doubtless the controversy will continue simmer over the next three years, but FIFA has survived such storms and is likely to weather this one. For tonight at least Argentina and the Netherlands will try and settle their own argument.

European Weightlifting Championships

VARNA, Bulgaria, May 22 (R)—Nikolai Kolesnikov of Soviet Union broke two of his own world records yesterday as he walked away with all three titles in the featherweight division of the European Weightlifting Championships here. The 25-year-old Olympic, world and European champion set his first world record in the clean and jerk as he lifted 166 kilograms (366 lbs) more than his previous record. As a measure of his dominance came into the competition with a first lift of 155 kgs. After all other competitors had dropped out, the next best clean and was 150 kgs. Kolesnikov went on to set an overall total of 366 kgs. for the combined snatch and jerk, which was 2.7 kgs. over his previous world mark. His nearest rival, Georgi Todonov of Bulgaria, making a comeback after two years out of competition to injury, was a full 20 kgs. behind the Russian overall.

another strange bid from West—a penalty double without a defensive trick. West led the ace of clubs, and declarer ruffed in his hand with the queen. There was obviously no point in trying the spade finesse—that was sure to lose. The only alternative was a dummy reversal.

Declarer could lead a trump to the nine, ruff a club, cross to the king of diamonds and ruff another club. Unfortunately, declarer would now be unable to get back to dummy to draw trumps, and would be prevented from running his diamonds and discarding two of dummy's spades.

However, there was still a glimmer of hope. Declarer could solve his entry problems if West held the ten of diamonds. This line would result in an extra undertrick if it failed, but 200 points was a small price to pay for the possibility of scoring a grand slam bonus.

After crossing to the nine of trumps and ruffing a second club, declarer led a low diamond and finessed the nine! When this held, he was almost home. He ruffed dummy's last club with his last trump then re-entered dummy with a diamond to the king. When both defenders had to follow suit, the hand was over.

Declarer drew the outstanding trumps, discarding spades from his hand. Now his long diamonds and ace of spades accounted for the rest of the tricks. In all, declarer scored one spade trick, seven trump tricks and five diamonds to make the grand slam.

ACP countries meet over EEC proposals for trade, aid pact

BRUSSELS, May 22 (R)—African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) countries meet today to examine the European Economic Community's proposals for a new trade and aid pact, which may include demands for a link between foreign assistance and human rights.

This issue had been highlighted by reports from Amnesty International of a massacre of children in the Central African Republic.

The reports have been denied by Emperor Bokassa but will give new impetus to demands from within EEC states for a link between aid and human rights.

The 57 ACP countries are meeting at ministerial level in Brussels to prepare for what they hope are final negotiations with the nine EEC members on Thursday on a new aid pact to replace the 1975 Convention.

But the EEC proposals left unanswered two major questions not yet agreed between the nine, which the ACP states must have answers before they can prepare their final position. These are the size of aid over the next five years and the human rights issue.

The ACP countries insist that aid should not be tied to their performance on human rights, saying this would amount to interference in their internal affairs.

The EEC has deliberately left the size of the aid package to the last minute. The nine are due to agree among themselves on Thursday morning, hours before meeting ACP ministers.

While informed sources put the likely size of the EEC offer at less than $8 billion, ACP sources indicated they may seek a figure nearer $20 billion.

The more generous package offered by the EEC, the easier it will be for the ACP countries to accept other terms which they do not welcome at first sight, diplomats said.

ACP sources said the most controversial issue during the negotiations with the EEC on Thursday and Friday is likely to be the earnings stabilisation scheme for ACP mineral production.

They want it to parallel the existing "Stabex" system, which covers 18 farm products and iron ore, by guaranteeing to support price levels, thus keeping up the producing countries' purchasing power.

The scheme proposed by the EEC relates to levels of production, not prices.

The ACP countries also want to ensure that Senegal and Gabon are included in the minerals scheme, a point left in doubt by the EEC proposals.

The 57 must also decide on where the new pact will be signed.

The Togolese capital of Lome is the most favoured candidate, diplomatic sources said, but Khartoum and Nairobi are also possible sites.

Netherlands reopens its 'most sensational' war crimes trial

THE HAGUE, May 22 (R)—The Dutch Supreme Court ordered millionaire art collector Pieter Menten to face a new trial on war crimes charges.

The five-member bench upheld an appeal by the attorney-general against the decision of a lower chamber last December to free the 79-year-old businessman and art collector from prison, court president Charles Moons announced.

The new trial will take place in Rotterdam.

Legal proceedings against Mr. Menten, who will be 80 on Saturday, started shortly after the Second World War. The case turned into the Netherlands' most sensational war crimes trial.

He was jailed for 15 years by an Amsterdam court in December 1947 but the verdict was quashed by the Supreme Court last May on the grounds that Mr. Menten had been promised immunity by the Dutch Justice Ministry more than a quarter of a century ago.

Attorney-General Jan Remmelink, in appealing against this decision, said the Hague court had failed to find out why Mr. Menten had been given such a pledge.

Earlier, 32-year-old Dan White, who had been convicted of shooting dead Mayor George Moscone and city official Harvey Milk, was given a jail sentence which means he could be released in three years. The prosecutor had sought the death penalty for Mr. White.

Mr. Moscone's successor as mayor, Dianne Feinstein, was trapped inside City Hall during the battle. The demonstrators finally dispersed, leaving the area littered with stones and debris, when a cold, damp fog swept over the city.

Killer of California officials sentenced; demonstrators riot

SAN FRANCISCO, May 22 (R) Five thousand chanting demonstrators, angered by a court's lenient sentence on the killer of San Francisco's mayor and an aide, went on the rampage last night, leaving dozens of people injured and a trail of burned cars and smashed windows.

The rioters, shouting "he got away with murder," threw tear gas into the lobby of City Hall and smashed down the building's glass-paned doors.

Police using riot control gas forced back the crowds. Several dozen demonstrators and policemen were injured in ensuing scuffles. Scores of demonstrators were arrested.

Denktash: Turkish, Greek Cypriots '180 degrees apart'

NICOSIA, May 22 (R) — Turkish-Cypriot leader Rauf Denktaş yesterday dashed hopes of an early deal with the Greek Cypriots, declaring: "We are 180 degrees apart."

He put a damper on reports that his weekend summit with Cyprus President Spyros Kyprianou had brought a breakthrough in the deadlock over the divided island. The two men agreed that regular negotiations should resume next month after a two-year break. But yesterday Mr. Denktaş warned: "Please do not think that what has been achieved is a breakthrough on the substance of the problem because it is not."

"It is merely a breakthrough in bringing two communities together who have refused to be together," he told a news conference in Famagusta.

President Kyprianou said yesterday he hoped the new negotiations would mark the start of progress towards a solution of the Cyprus problem, the Cyprus News Agency said.

"Undue optimism is not justified but, on the other hand, one should not be pessimistic," he said in a speech. "On our part, we shall do our best."

In an apparent tilt at Mr. Denktaş's outspoken comments, he said he regretted that the other side was already making statements "which, to say the least, are not constructive at all."

"What we have agreed is to negotiate," he said. "We have not agreed to negotiate through a public dialogue."

Cyprus has been unofficially partitioned since 1974 when Turkish troops invaded and occupied the northern part of the island.

Mr. Denktaş said yesterday: "I am sorry to say that on the substance of the matter, the parties are 180 degrees apart."

"We are united in keeping an independent Cyprus. We are united in keeping a bi-communal, bi-zonal federal non-aligned Cyprus."

"We are united in saying that Cyprus is our home but when it comes to the question of the security of the Turkish community, to how this security should be tackled, to how daily life shall be organised and how we shall begin our governmental life, we are 180 degrees apart."

British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington told Cyprus yesterday he hoped the new talks would lead to a just and lasting settlement, the Cyprus News Agency said.

He also said in a message to Foreign Minister Nicos Rolandis that the new peace initiative had the fullest support of Britain's new Conservative government, the agency said.

IEA meet signs accords on several energy issues

PARIS, May 22 (R)—Ministers attending the International Energy Agency (IEA) conference here signed agreements on projects to find new energy sources, conservation and a more effective use of oil.

The ministers, from the CRA's 20 member countries—all Western industrial states—began their meeting at the Paris-based agency's headquarters here after warnings that failure to reduce oil consumption could mean another major bout of world recession. The ministerial conference ends today.

Speakers at the conference said earlier that if the IEA's programme failed, the result could be another recession plus inflation of the type that hit the world in 1974-75.

European Energy Commissioner Guido Brunner told the opening session yesterday: "We have arrived at a crossroads. Economic growth based on surplus availability of cheap energy will not be possible any more."

The conference of the 20-nation IEA is taking place amid a continuing world oil shortage with supplies estimated to be about four per cent below demand. The IEA has set a target of a five per cent reduction in demand for imported oil this year.

IEA's programme includes research into how to extract more oil from existing wells. IEA scientists say world-wide oil reserves recoverable using current techniques were only 30 per cent of what was actually in the wells.

Mexico, a major oil-producing country which is not an IEA member, is joining Italy and New Zealand in testing a transportable electricity generator powered by geo-thermal energy.

Congress blamed for U.S. energy crisis

WASHINGTON, May 22 (R) — The White House yesterday blamed Congress for the energy crisis and the long lines of motorists queuing for petrol, particularly in California.

Press Secretary Jody Powell said it was disingenuous to blame President Carter or Energy Secretary James Schlesinger for the crisis.

The White House spokesman said the energy crisis had been caused not only by an interruption of oil from Iran but especially by the inactivity of Congress in dealing with President Carter's recommendations for a national energy policy.

He said votes in Congress had been based on narrow and special interests, not on the national interest, "and there was an inability in the legislature to reach a consensus on any national problem."

At the Senate, U.S. oil industry chiefs blamed petrol queues on a world shortage of oil and U.S. Government policy.

Their testimony before the Senate Energy Committee, however, was contested by some senators, who quoted government figures showing U.S. oil imports up over last year.

At the White House, presidential spokesman Powell, claiming that Congress lacked foresight and was unable to act when a crisis occurred, said: "It would have been nice if there had been no revolution in Iran and no disruption of oil supplies — that would have been fine."

"But now we have placed ourselves in a vulnerable position... and we will eventually suffer from that vulnerability."

"It is about time in a representative form of government that those who are selected to govern this country are held accountable for their own actions," he said in reference to Congress.

W. German party names woman as presidential candidate

BONN, May 22 (R) — Germany's ruling Social Democrats today named a woman as candidate for president in tomorrow's election.

The late nomination Deputy Bundestag President (parliamentary speaker) Annemarie Renger, 50, loved yesterday's decision.

Carl-Friedrich Wegmann, not to stand in the 1984 Democratic-Liberal coalition.

Kampuchean refugees sent back to Thailand amid gunfire, forced to leave Thailand

CHANTABURI, Thailand, May 22 (R) — Kampuchean refugees sent back to Thailand amid gunfire when Thai marines pushed them the border, military sources said yesterday. They said the refugees were trying to implement the government's policy of halting the flow of some 40,000 refugees and sending Kampuchean civilians to Khmer Rouge soldiers loyal to the ousted Pol Pot regime in their country.

But the Vietnamese-led forces of the new administration in Phnom Penh, conducting a campaign to clear western Kampuchea of Khmer Rouge, were only about three kilometres from the border. People were pushed back across the frontier, small arms fire shot out and they came fleeing back, the sources said.

Thai authorities evacuated three villages yesterday and sealed the area in an effort to deal with what has become a huge political humanitarian problem for Thailand. Military sources in Bangkok said senior Thai military officials met at Supreme Commander's quarters in the capital yesterday to discuss the issue, but no conclusions had been reached, and further meetings would be held.

Thailand, which has not recognised the Khmer Rouge-backed government of Heng Samrin in Phnom Penh, maintains a strict neutrality towards events in Kampuchea. But the Bangkok government has accused Thailand of supporting the Khmer Rouge and stepped up its complaints after between 50,000 and 60,000 Kampuchean refugees, including Khmer Rouge, were allowed to enter through Thailand last month.

The earlier influx had crossed near Angkor Wat, opposite northwestern Kampuchean town of Poipet, and moved south, apparently in an effort to link up with Khmer Rouge forces under Pol leadership in the southwestern Cardamom mountain range.

The latest batch of some 40,000, including a few thousand Khmer Rouge, crossed the border into Thailand over the weekend and kilometres south of Poipet, indicating that Vietnamese troops were moving swiftly and effectively in their bid to oust former Western Kampuchea.

One of Thailand's fears is that Vietnamese troops might enter Thai territory in pursuit of their fleeing enemies. Thai Minister Kriangsak Chomanan said recently Thailand would permit foreign forces to violate its territory along their eastern border.

While the Khmer Rouge soldiers would presumably like to continue the fight, many Kampuchean civilians would prefer to remain in Thailand. Their twin fears are Khmer Rouge brutality and acute food shortages in Kampuchea.

Thailand, which already houses over 150,000 Indo-Chinese refugees in camps, has refused to grant refugee status to Kampuchean refugees coming across since last January when the Pol Pot government was ousted.

One tried on 3 charges

Iran releases 2 Britons

TEHRAN, May 22 (R) — Two British men were released from custody in the southwest Iranian city of Ahwaz after one was tried on three charges by a revolutionary court, the two men reported yesterday. It was believed to be the first trial of a foreigner by a revolutionary tribunal.

"It was a very fair trial," 57-year-old George Flint, from London, said in a telephone interview from Ahwaz, where he and another Briton, Michael Mottram, 35, from Gloucester, were released Sunday night after being in detention since Wednesday night.

Mr. Flint said he had not known until the closing moments of his interrogation that he was in fact on trial.

Mr. Flint was arrested by four armed men late on Wednesday night as he was travelling from Ahwaz to Tehran via Matram. The two men had been taken back to Ahwaz where passports were confiscated.

Mr. Flint, a consultant British machine tool co. said: "I arrived back in London on Tuesday, and unfortunately into quite a storm. I faced hostile reception from the workers' committee."

He said he attended a meeting with the committee which it was alleged he had handled company funds in dealings with Savak, the disbanded secret police.

Mr. Flint said the court that his relations with Savak were innocent and his handling of the company funds was merely an innocent part of the Shah's regime.

"I'm on day four of a hunger strike and I know experience that the problem today."

He and four others to action to protest against the election of television news parties election broadcast.

The strike is typical lengths to which the radical go to in their battles. Party President Pamela Tabbachnick, former journalist, said the group, himself past on various liberal parties, was not the only one.

"We're a government party already," he said with a hint of irony. "We forced the referendum on abortion and divorce when others were happy just to talk."

Seated at his ancient desk, peering white-faced over the debris of campaign leaflets and broken typewriters, Mr. Fabre looked far from well.

"No, I don't feel too good," he said.

The rise of Italy's Radical Party

Opinion polls predict that Italy's Radical Party will make major gains in next month's general elections. If the party does well, it has promised Italy's 'first truly responsible government.'

By Nick Kotch

ROME — Italy's tiny Radical Party, the persistent scourge of the political establishment for the past three years, may soon face the real problem of having power.

The prospect of substantial gains in next month's elections has led to a heady mixture of excitement and apprehension at the party's Rome offices.

The Radicals, a libertarian outfit determined to sting Italy's sluggish political system into action, currently muster just four members in the 630-seat Chamber of Deputies.

But recent opinion polls predicted the radical share of the vote in next month's general elections would rise to about five per cent as against their 1.1 per cent total in 1976.

Such an increase would give them a powerful voice in a parliament littered with smaller and less dynamic parties. Not that the Radicals ever have any difficulty making themselves heard.

When Party President Marco Pannella wanted a softening of the drugs laws in 1975, he went on television smoking hashish.

When the Radicals wanted to force action to help the world's starving children, they managed to gain Pope John Paul's implicit approval by demonstrating in the Vatican during the traditional Easter Sunday service in St. Peter's.

The radicals' tactics of non-violent direct action, including hunger strikes, seem to have struck a chord, mostly among young and left-inclined Italians.

"At least they're doing something," said a Rome barber, explaining why the radicals would get his vote for the first time in the June 3 elections.

The same desire for grass-roots change has caused four deputies from other parties to switch to the Radicals in the last month, including Mr. Alessandro Tessari, a member of the second-placed Communist Party since 1972.

When he was proudly presented to reporters, Mr. Tessari said the Communist policy of co-operation with the Christian Democrats, Italy's biggest party, forced him to resign.

"The pact meant a 90 per cent majority in the house. There was a complete lack of debate or real adversarial politics. The radicals can change that," he said.

L'Unita, the Communist Party daily, poured scorn on his motives for switching. Their hostile reaction was typical of most established parties, who dismiss the Radicals as adolescent exhibitionists.

Other parties say the Radicals lack a coherent election programme to solve Italy's economic and political ills.

But there is little doubt that the Communists were shocked this month by the defection from their ranks of one of Italy's best-known writers, Mr. Leonardo Sciascia.

The Sicilian author said his decision to join the Radicals was consistent with his planned epitaph. "He contradicted others and himself."

The motto is thoroughly apt for the party whose statutes allow anyone to become a member, prohibit expulsions, and insist that parliamentary members vote according to conscience and not as a bloc.

To an outsider, the party's most apparent contradiction is the frail figure of Secretary Jean Fabre, a 32-year-old Parisian who despite his post retains his French citizenship.

"The radicals are an open party with a tradition of fighting for individual rights that goes back to the Mussolini era," he explained at the party's Rome headquarters.

"My election last year is consistent with that history."

He rejected the charge that the Radicals would be lost if their campaign bluff was called and they came out of the poll holding the balance of power between the bigger parties.

"We're a government party already," he said with a hint of irony. "We forced the referendum on abortion and divorce when others were happy just to talk."

Seated at his ancient desk, peering white-faced over the debris of campaign leaflets and broken typewriters, Mr. Fabre looked far from well.

"No, I don't feel too good," he said.
